Between the vibrant streetscapes, status as a financial and cultural capital of the world, and ability to attract people of all stripes, it's little wonder that New York City has long served as the setting for many top television shows and movies. As some of this year's most popular entertainment demonstrates, this shows no sign of slowing down. While you could watch them on your own laptop or computer, certain buildings offer beautifully appointed screening rooms to elevate the viewing experience and host a viewing party. We take a look at the city's most beautiful screening rooms and recommend some 2021 TV and movie debuts to watch in them.

Developed by Sheldon Solow and designed by Richard Meier & Partners Architects, One United Nations Park is a new 43-story addition to Midtown East. It offers high-class living with its swanky interiors, home automation, and amenities that focus on health and wellness. They include a 70' indoor lap pool with steam and sauna and expansive fitness center with private training studio. Entertaining is also at the forefront of the building with amenities like a billiards and game lounge, a catering kitchen, and a private dining room. A 12-seat screening room with built-in stepped seating is the perfect venue for live events of all types. See all listings here.
